VALENTINE'S DAY

(the history behind the yearly season of love)

Every year on the fourteenth day of February millions of people from all over the world give flowers, chocolate, cards, candy, and other gifts to their loved ones. Often restaurants are filled to capacity with heart-eyed couples who are keen to celebrate this special day together. On this amazing and unique "day of love," you would be hard pressed to find a young couple anywhere who was not eager to celebrate their relationship and make further efforts to woo each other.

How did this mushy day of love get started? Well, legends claim it all started with a guy named St. Valentine. But, who is this guy anyway? Where did all the crazy traditions that we have today come from? As it turns out, there are different views on how it all got started.

St. Valentine was a priest in what is now Italy during the third century. During that time, there was an emperor named Claudius II who ruled over Rome. According to legend, Claudius believed that single men made better soldiers and forbid young men to get married. Valentine felt this was not fair and secretly helped people get married. When Claudius found out about this he was furious and had Valentine thrown into prison and killed. Some believe that the couples Valentine helped marry visited him while he was in prison.
